Doctor Pays $40,000 for dumping 1,600 Patient Files

A Charlotte doctor was forced to pay a hefty fine for dumping his patients' financial and medical information in the summer of 2010.

Dr. Ervin Batchelor of the Carolina Center for Development and Rehabilitation has paid $40,000 as a fine, according to a statement released by the NC Attorney General's Office.

Batchelor owns and operates Carolina Center, a psychological testing and treatment facility in Charlotte. His office illegally disposed of 1,000 patient files by dumping them at the West Mecklenburg Recycling Center in June of 2010.

Officials said the files contained info for 1,600 people with data such as: names, addresses, dates of birth, Social Security numbers, drivers' license numbers, insurance account numbers, and health information. Sherri Dobbins of Charlotte had a file that was one of hundreds of patients whose personal information was discarded in the trash bin.

"What if the wrong people got hold of it, and two or three months from now my identity -- I find out somebody's taken my identity?" Dobbins said when the files were first found. "All the information they needed was right there in that file."

The records were accidentally discarded in a public recycling bin and thrown out by the doctor's sons during a move from one office to another, Batchelor's attorney told WBTV last year. The sons mistakenly took the 25 boxes of medical files containing social security numbers, medical histories and pictures of patients to the West Mecklenburg Recycling Center on Byrum Road somewhere between June 22-24, the attorney told WBTV.

Many of the records were from 2007-2009. By law, medical providers are required to keep patient records for at least six years before discarding them. State law also requires when records are to be discarded, they should be burned, pulverized or shredded to protect patient privacy.

"Any business you entrust with your information has a duty to keep it safe," Attorney General Roy Cooper said. "Sensitive financial and health information should never be carelessly dumped, putting customers and patients at risk of identity theft." The Attorney General's office says medical records also face additional restrictions under federal health privacy laws.

All Points Mobile Shredding is your solution to the security of your confidential documents and your assurance you have complied with state and federal laws.

Big Breaches Build Momentum for Federal Data Protection Law

The Obama administration's push to create a national standard for when and how banks and other companies must notify customers of a data breach appears to be gaining momentum.

Financial services representatives told a Senate panel they would support the White House's proposal, which would, among other things, combine a patchwork of 47 state laws on the issue into a federal standard.

Senate Banking Committee Chairman Tim Johnson also appeared supportive of strengthening cybersecurity laws, saying recent high profile data breaches within the financial services sector and elsewhere underscore the importance of the issue.

"Breaches are disruptive and raise the potential for financial fraud, identity theft and, potentially, severe threats to our national economic security," Johnson said.

Citigroup Inc. was the most recent high-profile data breach, after it disclosed that a hacker had accessed customer information for more than 360,000 credit card accounts this summer. Lawmakers have criticized Citigroup for waiting nearly a month to disclose the breach. The bank said it discovered the breach on May 10 during routine maintenance, but didn't begin notifying customers until June 3.

Sen. Robert Menendez, D-N.J., said there have been 288 publicly disclosed breaches at financial services companies in the last six years that exposed at least 83 million customer records.

Banks who have a secure document destruction solution significantly reduce their risk of liability and exposure. All Points is AAA NAID Certified - the highest designation of security in the industry.
